I. INTRODUCTION: CURBING COVID-19 CONSTITUTIONALLY AND THE ELUSION OF POLITICAL RESPONSIBILITY

1. Federal Epidemics Acts: three-tier approach

When COVID-19 reached Switzerland at the end of February 2020, the Federal Act of 28 September 2012 on Combating Communicable Human Diseases (Epidemics Act, EpA) had been in place for more than four years. Previously, the EpA, whose aim is to ‘prevent and combat the outbreak and spread of communicable diseases’, was subject to intense political debates culminating in a referendum on 22 September 2013. After 60% of voters approved the bill, the EpA entered into force on 1 January 2016. The EpA set a three-tier approach in place, distinguishing between ‘normal’, ‘special’ and ‘extraordinary’ epidemiological situations. Accordingly, an aggravation of the epidemiological circumstances leads, based on a respective decision by the executive branch of the federal government (Federal Council) to a transfer of governmental tasks and responsibilities from the cantons (constituent states) to the Federation (federal government) on the one hand and from Federal Parliament (legislative branch) to the Federal Council (executive branch) on the other hand. The more the epidemiological situation escalates, the more power is being concentrated in the Federal Council. According to the EpA, a ‘special situation’ exists when the authorities responsible for the prevention and combating of communicable diseases prove unable to prevent the outbreak and spread of such diseases, resulting in either an increased risk of infection and spread, a particular threat to public health or detrimental effects on the economy or on other areas of life.

A ‘special situation’ also exists should the World Health Organization (WHO) identify an international health emergency threatening the health of the population in Switzerland. Such a ‘special situation’ allows the Federal Council, after consulting the cantons, to order ‘measures’ aimed at individuals or at the population as a whole to require doctors and other health professionals to participate in the fight against communicable diseases and to declare vaccinations compulsory for particular vulnerable groups of persons. The most aggravated state of affairs – the ‘extraordinary situation’ – allows the Federal Council ‘to impose the necessary measures for all or part of the country’, without consulting the cantons. Despite these sweeping powers, the EpA remains silent as to the definition of an ‘extraordinary situation’. In his dispatch to the Federal Parliament on the EpA, the Federal Council stated that the relevant clause is but a declaration of the emergency powers the executive branch of the federal government holds under the Swiss Federal Constitution (Federal Constitution). These powers allow the Federal Council ‘to enact orders and take decisions in order to counter existing or imminent disturbances seriously threatening either public order or external or internal security’. All such orders ‘must be limited in time’. As in most other areas of federal law, it is generally for the cantons to implement the measures imposed by the Federal Council during both ‘special’ and ‘extraordinary’ situations.

2. The first wave: emergency loans as a public-private partnership

Based on this legal framework, the Federal Council declared the epidemiological situation to be ‘special’ and banned all large-scale events involving more than 1,000 people on 28 February 2020. On 16 March 2020, the federal executive branch went further and, amid the accelerated spread of COVID-19, proclaimed the ‘extraordinary situation’. The Federal Council introduced stringent measures such as border checks and the closing of shops, restaurants, bars and entertainment and leisure facilities, prohibited public gatherings of more than five people and did not order but ‘recommended’ all citizens to stay home. When administering emergency loans to small businesses, the Federal Council, based on its constitutional emergency powers, took the unique approach to enter into close collaboration with more than 120 Swiss commercial banks. With a simple declaration of one page, small and mid-size enterprises could apply for an immediate and interest-free loan worth up to 10% of their annual revenue, capped at Swiss Francs (CHF) 500,000 (approx. United States dollars [USD] 560,000 or Euros [EUR] 460,000). These loans were provided by a Swiss bank, underwritten with a full credit guarantee on the amount by the federal government.

Of higher amounts up to CHF 20 million (approx. USD 22.3 million/EUR 18.4 million), 85% each were guaranteed by the federal government, charged at 0.5% interest and again provided by a Swiss commercial bank. Running the scheme through the existing network of commercial banks based on existing customer relationships proved crucial for the initial success of the program, as the banks could rely on both the credit history and data of their clients. Within a week, more than 70,000 small and mid-size businesses received a loan through this public-private partnership.

Soon after the first wave of COVID-19 subsided towards the end of May 2020, the Federal Council declared the ‘extraordinary situation’ to be terminated as of 19 June 2020, lifted most of the remaining restrictions, proclaimed the ‘special situation’ and thus handed most of the tasks and responsibilities in controlling and combating COVID-19 back to the cantons. Regarding separation of powers at the federal level the extraordinary powers granted to the Federal Council to combat the COVID-19 epidemic are, as of 26 September 2020, enshrined in the ‘Federal COVID-19 Act’ decided by Federal Parliament on 25 September 2020 and passed as an emergency federal statutory law. As of 1 October 2020, the last relevant restrictive measure imposed by the Federation still in place – the ban on large-scale events for over 1,000 people – was lifted. With the benefit of hindsight, it is difficult not to acknowledge that most restrictions were lifted both prematurely and hastily.

3. The second wave: elusion of political accountability and blame-shifting

During the second half of October, the laboratory-confirmed cases, hospitalizations and deaths due to COVID-19 rose dramatically once again and peaked in mid-November 2020. This ‘second wave’ of the COVID-19 pandemic hit Switzerland worse than the first one. As of 19 February 2021, Switzerland accounted for 6,336 laboratory-confirmed cases and 106.42 deaths with a laboratory-confirmed COVID-19 infection per 100,000 inhabitants. Based on cumulative confirmed COVID-19 deaths per million persons, Switzerland, as of February 2021, fared worse during the entire pandemic than neighboring Austria and Germany yet slightly better than France and Italy. In view of mounting discontent with the considerable powers of the Federal Council under the Epa, both on the part of the political parties and the cantons, the federal executive branch shied away from reintroducing the ‘extraordinary situation’ and left the ‘special situation’ in place instead. The Federal Council thus might still impose measures aimed at individuals or at the population but is under an obligation to consult the cantons beforehand. Furthermore, each canton could enact its own additional measures. Still, the small scale of Swiss federalism – 26 cantons are assembled on less than 42,000 km² inhabited by 8.7 million people – prompted many executive branches of the cantons, whose members are all elected directly by the people, to refrain from unilaterally imposing more restrictive and often unpopular measures despite increasing case numbers on their territory.

4. The silence of the courts

In spite of the severe restrictions of fundamental rights, courts have played a subordinate role at best during the pandemic. Although the Federal Court, Switzerland’s highest court, had to adjudicate a number of appeals against measures to combat COVID-19 these proved to be manifestly unfounded to the extent that the court entered into the merits of the appeals at all. In contrast, some administrative courts of the cantons did in fact rule on the delimitation of the emergency powers of the executive branches of the cantons. The Administrative Court of the Canton of Zurich held that the requirement to wear hygiene masks in shops and shopping centers did not constitute an impermissible interference with fundamental rights. Based on federal constitutional law, one can identify three major reasons for the courts’ silence: First, ordinances of the Federal Council may not be challenged in courts as such, although specific sanctions imposed by officials based on these ordinances such as arrests or fines may indeed be contested. Second, the Federal Court largely deferred to the Federal Council in its past decisions defining the limits of executive emergency powers. Third, the Federal Constitution commits all courts to adhere to federal statutory law, even in the event of a conflict with the Federal Constitution.

5. Preliminary assessment: diffusing political accountability by direct democracy, federalism, separation of powers, and collegiate executive branches

Georg Wilhelm Friedrich Hegel observed in 1820 that the ‘owl of Minerva begins its flight only with the falling of dusk’, pointing to the fact that phenomena can only be explained and evaluated once they have passed and become history. To the extent that a preliminary assessment of coping with COVID-19 from the perspective of constitutional law may nonetheless be reasonably ventured even before the pandemic has subsided; the main conclusion might be that the alignment of Switzerland’s political system towards consensus and integration of linguistic, confessional and socio-economic minorities within the country, as underpinned by the Federal Constitution and as a salient advantage of the Swiss political system, comes at the price of the diffusion of political accountability. Direct democracy, federalism, the separation of powers between Federal Parliament and the Federal Council as well as the collegial decision making and interaction within the executive branches at both federal levels (Federation, cantons) all provide politicians not only with loopholes to evade political accountability, but also rhetorical munition to shift blame onto other actors within the political realm.

Owing to the Swiss system of direct democracy, 50,000 citizens are entitled to launch a referendum against any federal statutory law approved by Federal Parliament. Empirically, such ‘optional referenda’ are launched against around a mere 6% of all the legislative acts that are constitutionally subject to this institution of direct democracy. Roughly half of all federal acts actually put to an ‘optional referendum’ have been vetoed at the ballot box since 1874. This considerable political uncertainty posed by the optional referendum creates strong incentives to seek broad parliamentary consensus on important policy issues and forms a major factor of Switzerland’s transformation from a majoritarian to a consensus democracy. Consensus democracy, however, also offers incentives to politicians to avoid political responsibility by passing on sensitive issues like a hot potato. Decisions at the ballot box on bills or treaties are very rarely framed as a vote of no confidence in a member of government. Since 1959 not a single member of the Federal Council has resigned after a referendum that did not go according to his or her preferences.

Furthermore, due to the small-scale structure of Swiss federalism, a single canton has little incentive to unilaterally take potentially unpopular decisions. As many persons live and work in different cantons, each government of a canton can reasonably claim that a unilateral decision would be ineffective and thereby shift the burden to take unpopular decision upon the federal government.

All members of the Federal Council are elected by Federal Parliament for a fixed period of four years. Owing to the lack of a vote of no confidence or a recall, political parties and their members of Federal Parliament face little pressure to fall in line with decisions taken by the Federal Council or to support them in public. With regard to the separation of powers between the Federal Council and Federal Parliament, the Federal Constitution merely provides that ‘significant’ and ‘fundamental’ provisions must be part of statutory federal law. Such law generally rests outside the scope of judicial review. In view of the powers granted to the Federal Council by the EpA, this provides members of parliament with the opportunity to put pressure on the executive branch by threatening to overrule ordinances enacted by the Federal Council and to take credit for any adjustments, while avoiding any political accountability for such decisions.

The executive branches of both the cantons and the Federation are collegiate bodies consisting of an uneven number of members with identical rights and responsibilities. Decisions are taken, to the extent possible, by consensus and all of the members of the executive are expected to faithfully represent and implement the decisions by the majority. Ideally, such structures lead to positive instead of mere negative coordination and thus to better informed decisions. At the same time, each member of the executive branch is provided with an opportunity not only to hide behind the collegium but to cautiously distance him- or herself from the collective decisions or to leak his or her opposition to the media.

The COVID-19 pandemic thus highlighted that the merit of Swiss constitutional law in establishing consensus between linguistic, confessional, and cultural minorities has its shadows. It allows the cantons, members of the federal parliament and political parties to shirk political responsibility and shift political blame onto other actors instead.

II. MAJOR CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENTS: GENERAL ELECTION OF THE SWISS FEDERAL PARLIAMENT

Swiss citizens were called to the ballot boxes three times in 2020 to decide upon nine subjects. None of the proposed four amendments to the Federal Constitution, all of them popular initiatives, achieved the necessary majority of both the voters and the cantons. The popular initiative ‘For responsible businesses – to protect people and the environment’, was launched by a broad coalition of left-leaning parties, NGOs, and charitable organizations and brought forward a constitutional amendment to commit all companies with registered offices or headquarters in Switzerland to adhere to ‘international environmental standards’ both in Switzerland and abroad and to ensure that these standards are ‘respected by the businesses under their control’.

These obligations would have been made enforceable through torts claims before Swiss courts. The initiative was supported by 50.73% of voters but failed to gain a majority of the cantons and was thus rejected. The popular initiative ‘For moderate immigration (limitation initiative)’, which would have ended free movement of persons with the members-states of the EU and the European Economic Area, met the same fate. The popular initiative was roundly rejected by 61.7% of voters and more than 80% of the cantons. As popular initiatives seeking to commit the Federation to ‘promote the supply of affordable rental housing’ and to bar the Swiss National Bank, Switzerland’s central bank, and pensions funds from ‘financing producers of military equipment’ were both defeated, the Federal Constitution remained unaltered in 2020.

III. CONSTITUTIONAL CASES: JUDICIALIZATION OF POLITICS, ISLAMIC HEADSCARVES, AND HOMESCHOOLING

1. Association ‘Senior Women for Climate Protection’ et al. vs. Federal Council et al.: climate change litigation on its way to the European Court of Human Rights

‘Senior Women for Climate Protection’ (SEPO), an association under Swiss law, whose roughly 1,800 members are all female and on average 73 years old, and four of its members filed a motion seeking to commit the Federal Council and three federal admin-administrative agencies to take more stringent climate action in such a way that Switzerland’s contribution to global emissions of greenhouse gases (GHGs) would be in line with the aim of the 2015 Paris Agreement to hold ‘the increase in the global average temperature to well below 2 °C above pre-industrial levels’.

According to SEPO, this would mean reducing domestic GHG-emissions by at least 25 percent by 2020 compared with 1990 levels, instead of 20 percent as prescribed in federal statutory law. SEPO argued that the federal government, both by refraining from initiating a revision of the allegedly too lenient climate legislation and by ostensibly displaying undue restraint in implementing the statutory provisions, failed to meet the positive obligations deriving from the right to life and the right to respect for private and family life enshrined in both the Federal Constitution and the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR). SEPO claimed that elderly women were significantly more and adversely affected in their invoked human rights by higher temperatures and heat waves caused by GHG-emissions.

On behalf of the Federal Council, the federal administration held not to consider SEPO’s claim on its merit. The Federal Administrative Court (appellate court) and – on 5 May 2020 – the Federal Court both affirmed this decision. The latter court held that the reprimanded omissions by the federal authorities would ‘at the present time’ fail to impair the complainants’ rights to life and to respect for private and family life to the extent required by the Administrative Procedure Act in order to vindicate legal remedy. Having exhausted all domestic remedies, SEPO and four of its members filed an application with the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR) on 26 November 2020. SEPO’s motion thus arguably constitutes the first case of climate change litigation reaching the ECtHR in strict compliance with the admissibility criterion according to which the ‘Court may only deal with the matter after all domestic remedies have been exhausted’.

In the canton of Basel-City, a hub of life-science industry where pharmaceutical giants such as Novartis and Roche are headquartered, a popular initiative was submitted with the aim of amending the constitution of the canton with the following passage: ‘This constitution guarantees […] the right of non-human primates to life and to physical and mental integrity’. The Grand Council of the Canton of Basel-City (Parliament) declared the initiative invalid owing to its alleged inconsistency with federal law, which takes precedence over any law of a canton. The Court of Appeal of the canton overturned this decision. On further appeal, the Federal Court upheld this previous decision. The popular initiative ‘basic rights for non-human primates’ will thus be put to a popular vote. The Federal Court reasoned that the cantons are, in their own constitution, allowed to guarantee fundamental rights beyond the minimum standard set by both the Federal Constitution and the ECHR. The Federal Court emphasized that the initiative did not call for the application of existing fundamental rights applicable to humans to animals, but rather for the introduction of new rights reserved for non-human primates only. The Federal Court further underscored that fundamental rights would primarily, if not exclusively, grant protection against the government of the canton and its administration. Fundamental rights enshrined in the constitution of the Canton of Basel-City would therefore be directed against the authorities of the canton, including the University of Basel and the University Hospital of Basel, and of its municipalities, even though these entities currently neither own nor keep non-human primates. The Federal Court stressed that private law legislation forms an exclusive federal power. Subjects of private law, in particular life-science industry with its laboratories and other private research institutions, would therefore not be bound by the constitutional amendment the popular initiative advanced. As a result, the constitutional amendment would largely fail to create any third-party effects among private entities. Against this backdrop, the decision of the Federal Court illustrates the favorable conditions for regulatory experimentation and innovation that the interaction of federalism and popular initiatives creates. Still, the popular initiative, if approved, would essentially be reduced to what may be coined ‘constitutional virtue signaling’ but largely fail to be of practical relevance.

IV. LOOKING AHEAD

On 7 March 2021, Swiss citizens will be called to the ballot box to decide on the popular initiative ‘Yes to the Veiling Ban’ seeking to prohibit all face covering in public places and in places opened to the public, with the exception of places of worship. Despite its neutral wording, the initiative primarily seeks to outlaw wearing specific Islamic female dresses, in particular the burqa and the niqab, in public. On 13 June 2021, citizens will vote on the referendum against the ‘Federal COVID-19 Act’ which was passed as an emergency federal statutory law and enacted immediately before an optional referendum could take place.

SUMMARY

Afghanistan
2020 saw the Taliban inking a peace deal with the United States and holding talks with the Afghan Government for the first time. The outcomes of these talks would be vital in shaping not only conditions of peace in the country but also the future of Afghanistan’s constitutionalism.

Albania
In 2020, the Constitutional Court continued to lack the quorum needed to decide cases on the merits. However, there were important developments in the process of constitutional reform involving the electoral system, the ongoing implementation of the judicial vetting process, and the creation and improvement of judicial institutions.

Argentina
On December 30, Congress passed into law a bill that decriminalizes abortion, culminating an extraordinary process of women’s mobilization. Other than this, the Supreme Court found itself pressed by opposing political forces to settle sensitive questions. The outcome was bad constitutional law—perhaps the only that a country perpetually in crisis can produce.

Australia
In case of Love v. Commonwealth, the Australian High Court found that Aboriginal Australians and Torres Strait Islanders could not be considered aliens under s 51 (xix) of the Australian Constitution due to their unique spiritual, cultural and historical connection to the land of Australia. While the decision failed to recognise indigenous sovereignty adverse to the Crown, the case was an important step in furthering Aboriginal rights in Australia.
Austria
2020 was expected to be the centennial of the Austrian Federal Constitution. However, it was overshadowed by the coronavirus crisis. Many of the government’s measures to prevent the spread of the coronavirus were declared illegal by the Constitutional Court for a lack of legal basis. Moreover, the Court’s repeal of the assisted suicide ban aroused much criticism.

Belgium
The COVID-19 pandemic dominated the Belgian political and legal agenda in 2020. The pandemic accelerated the formation of a new federal government after a temporary minority government was granted special powers. The federal government decided to combat the coronavirus crisis mainly through ministerial decrees, which was criticized by constitutional scholars.

Bosnia and Herzegovina
Balancing measures to minimize the impact of the novel coronavirus while continuing economic flows and social interaction proved to be a controversial issue. Amid the pandemic, the country also faced the problems to organize local elections. These circumstances put enormous pressure on the Constitutional Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Brazil
In 2020, Brazilian Constitutional Law was shaped by the (mis)management of the COVID-19 crisis and attempted assaults on the country’s democracy. The Supreme Court played a central role in both areas. Brazilian democracy is still resisting such threats, but not without serious concerns about its future.

Canada
The Supreme Court adopted a new “principled approach” to remedies for unconstitutional laws. Judicial declarations of invalidity will not be suspended unless there is a compelling public interest for doing so. When a suspension is granted, the claimant will not be denied an individual remedy absent compelling reason.

Cape Verde
The first CV-US SOFA Referral was decided in 2020. The Constitutional Court decided that one of its clauses was incompatible with the national sovereignty principle when interpreted as recognizing the power of US Forces to judge its members on CV soil.

Chile
The state took economic and health-related measures in the context of the Covid-19 Pandemic. The Constitutional Court rejected a constitutional amendment to allow individuals to use part of their retirement funds. The Court used the unconstitutional constitutional amendment doctrine for the first time in its history.

Costa Rica
The global pandemic and the state’s response to it dominated the social, political, economic, and legal landscape of Costa Rica in 2020. The government’s measures to combat the pandemic, while successful in comparison with most other countries in the world, generated significant political and litigative backlash.

Cuba
The most transcendent issue in constitutional matters in the Republic of Cuba during 2020 was the adoption of several legal provisions, as a legislative complement to the Constitution approved in 1992. These were mainly focused on defining the powers of state bodies, as well as the exercise of fundamental rights.

Cyprus
2020 was challenging for Cypriot constitutional law, especially due to the outbreak of COVID-19. The unpreparedness of the Cypriot legal order to deal with an issue of that magnitude resulted in undermining the rule of law, with the adoption of legally ambiguous measures that have not undergone effective judicial scrutiny.

Czech Republic
In 2020, the Czech government repeatedly breached basic principles of democracy and rule of law when adopting anti-pandemic measures. Legal experts and courts responded swiftly, criticizing government actions and repealing some extraordinary measures, proving that democracy and rule of law still prevail in the Czech Republic.

Denmark
Due to Covid-19, the government was initially granted significant powers to implement restrictions without having to consult Parliament. This culminated in the government causing the permanent closure of an industry through actions accused of being outside of their mandate. Towards the end of 2020, Parliament regained more control of restrictions.

Ecuador
The COVID-19 pandemic presented several challenges to Ecuador’s constitutional system. The Constitutional Court played a crucial role during this health crisis, legitimizing... itself as an independent institution. It found a balance between an ever-expanding set of executive powers and the protection of Ecuador’s democracy and the citizens’ rights.

Egypt

In 2020, Egypt amended its laws regulating the House of Representatives, the exercise of political rights, parliamentary elections, and emergency declarations. Egypt also issued the Senate Law. New members of the Senate and the House of Representatives were elected. The majority in both institutions was reserved for political parties associated with the regime.

El Salvador

The 1983’s Constitution attributed the power to decide the processes of suspension or loss of citizenship rights to the Constitutional Chamber. However, this attribution was exercised until 2020, but had no legal procedure established so it was created by the Chamber itself through its jurisprudence.

Estonia

The participation of a right-wing populist party in the government provided for a tense political atmosphere that coincided with the Covid-19 pandemic. But the State Court also had to decide issues that, in terms of state organization, have been waiting for an answer for some time.

Georgia

This report provides a brief introduction to the Georgian constitutional system; constitutional amendments; parliamentary regional elections; appointments of judges to the courts; appointment of the General Prosecutor; COVID-19 pandemic regulations, landmark judgments of the Constitutional Court in 2020; developments expected in 2021 regarding the elections; court vacancies; Constitutional Court cases, and other related events.

Germany

The year 2020 witnessed two crucial developments: first, the FCC for the first time declared a judgment of the CJEU ultra vires testing the cooperative relationship between the courts, and second, it acknowledged that fundamental rights apply extraterritorially thereby strengthening constitutional accountability for state activities abroad.

Ghana

The Imposition of Restrictions Act, which was passed overnight under a certificate of urgency, equipped the president with dangerously wide powers which are to be exercised on opaque grounds and outside the supervision of Parliament.

Greece

2020 will be remembered for the constitutional response to COVID-19 through measures that limited constitutional liberties. This odd year was further marked by a long-awaited decision finding several former Members of Parliament (MPs) that belonged to the neo-Nazi political party Golden Dawn, and others of participating in it, guilty of heading a criminal organization.

Hong Kong

The Chinese Central Authorities introduced a national security law for Hong Kong which stipulates principles and duties for safeguarding national security in this special administrative region, creates new security offences for the region and establishes institutions and mechanisms for their enforcement.

India

In 2020, the Supreme Court of India imposed significant restrictions on the rights to freedom of speech, expression, and association holding that public protests against a controversial amendment to India’s Citizenship Law were subject to state review concerning the location, duration, and size of the protests.

Indonesia

During the COVID-19 pandemic, the Jokowi administration undermined the minimum system of checks and balances between the elected branches of government through a series of laws. At the same time, the Constitutional Court under the chairmanship of Anwar Usman, has retreated further into a deferential and non-interventionist Court.

Ireland

From comparatively typical issues about the legality, constitutionality or content of emergency public health measures to more Irish-specific questions about potential non-compliance with measures by a sitting Supreme Court judge or the sitting of Seanad Eireann; the Covid-19 pandemic was central to Ireland’s constitutional issues in 2020.

Israel

2020 in Israel is characterized by a fusion of three crises: constitutional, political and COVID-19. After three elections (April 2019, September 2019, March 2020) with no clear results, a rotating government was established, accompanied by a major constitutional amendment of Basic Law: The Government.

Italy

The year 2020 brought significant innovations in the management of the constitutional trial with some amendments approved to the internal procedural rules of the Court, with the aim of opening new channels of communication with the Constitutional Court.

Japan

In 2020, Japan was confronted with the Covid-19 pandemic. The Abe cabinet, which had been eager to amend the constitution, had failed to take action against the Covid-19 pandemic and was forced to leave office giving way to the new Suga cabinet.
Kazakhstan
The President of Kazakhstan, Kassym-Jomart Tokayev, signed a decree that declared a state of emergency in the country. This unprecedented step was taken “in order to protect the lives and health of the citizens” after the World Health Organization declared COVID-19 a pandemic.

Kenya
By the end of 2020, an amendment to the Constitution in a number of important aspects has become a real possibility. The Constitutional amendment process, though led by the President, is by means of a popular initiative designed for the people. Some incoherence and some concerning provisions are a likely outcome.

Kosovo
The Constitutional Court’s verdict declaring unconstitutional the decision of the Assembly of the Republic of Kosovo on the election of the Government is the most important constitutional development in 2020. The Court’s decision terminated the mandate of the government and prompted new elections, which will be held in early 2021.

Luxembourg
The main discussion yet to be settled is how the Constitution should be rewritten. The transformation of the Constitution into a “living instrument” continues to hold the attention of all institutions, including the strengthened Constitutional Court. The last filed amendment proposal contains some important input from the “Waringo report” on the reform of the Grand-Ducal Court.

Malaysia
The year 2020 witnessed a change of government for only the second time in the history of Malaysia. Unlike the change of government in 2018, the events of 2020 saw the federal government collapse due to internal fractionalism and the appointment of a new government without calling a general election.

Mexico
The Constitution incorporated new social rights related to vulnerable groups. Now, the State must guarantee financial support to people with permanent disabilities. Moreover, people under the age of eighteen, indigenous people, Afro-Mexicans over the age of sixty-four, and people living in poverty are to be prioritized. People over the age of sixty-eight have the right to receive a non-contributory pension.

Montenegro
After an unsuccessful experiment in electing the “presiding judge,” which revealed the existing polarization amongst the judges, the Constitutional Court managed to embrace the ECtHR standards. However, as a remote historian, it offered a quantum of solace that the protection of rights subsists no matter who are the parties involved.

Netherlands
As childcare benefits were unjustifiably reclaimed from about 26,000 families wrongly identified as “wilful fraudsters,” the parliamentary report “Unprecedented Injustice” concluded that, in the framework of an overheated political reaction to fight fraud, fundamental principles of the rule of law had been violated, which resulted in the resignation of Rutte III government.

New Zealand
As with the rest of the globe, COVID-19. How New Zealand responded to this threat casts new light on the role of its various constitutional actors, practices and principles. Judicial oversight of that response produced what may be this generation’s most important public law case.

Nigeria
The persistence of electoral malfeasance in Nigeria imperils the nation’s electoral integrity, casting a dark cloud over the 2023 general elections. The brutal repression of peaceful mass protests during the last quarter of 2020 lowers Nigeria’s democratic performance. Though there is growing judicial assertiveness, key indicators of judicial independence and democracy remain unsatisfactory.

North Macedonia
Dealing with the unanticipated health and economic crises caused by the pandemic represented the biggest challenge for North Macedonia in 2020. On the positive side, the country became a NATO member in March 2020. However, the beginning of EU membership negotiations for North Macedonia has been stalled by Bulgaria.

Palestine
2020 has seen the Palestinian government enact emergency measures in order to face the pandemic. This suspension of constitutional norms, however, is cause for concern in Palestine due to its previous track record in using emergency measures inappropriately. Also, this year an interesting constitutional awareness campaign has emerged.

Paraguay
In Paraguay, the year 2020 was dominated by the COVID-19 pandemic. Based on a dubious interpretation of the Constitution the Executive Branch has taken a central role in the legislative, administrative, and financial activities while also establishing important restrictions to fundamental rights via executive decrees to confront the crisis.
Peru
The constitutional landscape of Peru is marked by the political scandals of the past. The tensions between the executive and legislative branches continued to be the subject of the Constitutional Court’s work in 2020, which had to decide, for example, on the legality of the dissolution of Congress.

Poland
The government’s approach to tackling the COVID-19 pandemic in 2020 by means of by-laws posed a direct threat to civil and human rights in Poland. Other important factors including the further undermining of the judiciary’s independence, also confirmed an ongoing democratic breakdown.

Portugal
In Portugal, 2020 was strongly influenced by the Covid-19 pandemic and the measures implemented to deal with the sanitary crisis. The constitutional jurisprudence produced interesting rulings concerning not only those measures but also the principle of the precedence of EU law, tenants’ right of pre-emption and the right of appeal.

Romania
In Romania, 2020 was an electoral year and Covid-19 was a game-changer at the political and constitutional levels. A permanent conflict between Parliament and Government - supported by a more politically active President, manifested. The Constitutional Court’s decisions regarded less constitutional conflicts and had an increasing number of dissenting opinions.

Russia
Notwithstanding the pandemic, a deep economic crisis, and the rise of social protests, 2020 has been marked by the adoption of the “great” constitutional reform. As can be seen in the adjudication of the draft amendments, the role of the Constitutional Court is confirmed as a supporter of the rulers’ choices.

South Africa
The party proportional representation system of South Africa, introduced in 1994 as a transitional arrangement to be reviewed in due course, was found to be unconstitutional because it excluded independent candidates from participation in elections. Parliament is required to rectify the legislation within two years.

Spain
In the controversial judgement 190/2020 the Constitutional Court determined that offending a symbol of the state, the flag, was not protected by freedom of expression. This ruling is expected to be reviewed by the European Court of Human Rights, as has happened with previous rulings around freedom of expression.

Sweden
The Covid-19 pandemic put the Swedish constitution to a stress test and the nature of the constitution was one of the reasons given to the Swedish corona strategy, which entailed soft law measures rather than strict lockdowns and criminal law sanctions for violations against quarantine rules and lockdowns.

Switzerland
Based upon the severity of an epidemic, the Swiss Epidemic Act of 2012 sets out a three-tier approach to transfer powers from the constituent states to the Federation and from the Federal Parliament to the Executive branch of the Federal Government. COVID-19 highlighted that the alignment of Switzerland’s political system towards consensus facilitates eluding political responsibility.

Slovenia
2020 was a tumultuous year for Slovenia. It was marked by a profound public health crisis and deep political cleavages. This was also reflected in the case law of the Constitutional Court which dealt with several important cases pertaining to the separation of powers, EU law and Covid-19 crisis measures.
it puts constitutional change on the reform agenda after a long lull. Paralleling uncertainties surrounding constitutional amendment, mixed scenes of constitutional development emerge in the general constitutional landscape.

Thailand
The year 2020 will be remembered for the youth uprising. Fed up with corruption and human rights violations, people demanded the restoration of democracy, which has been in decline since 2006. Above all, protesters would like to settle the long-standing dispute between the monarchy and democracy for good.

Tunisia
In Tunisia, 2020 can be labeled as the year of government formation and reshuffle. In a troublesome year for the entire planet with the outbreak of a global pandemic, Tunisia began 2020 struggling to form a government to end it with a new government formation process.

Turkey
The Turkish Government used the pandemic to double down on autocracy. It also continued its campaign to take control of the TCC. Several cases delivered in 2020, such as Demirtas decided by the ECtHR’s Grand Chamber and Turan adjudicated by the TCC, are critical landmarks regarding Turkey’s commitment to human rights and the rule of law.

Ukraine
In contrast to 2019, the reported period was not an active year in terms of constitutional reform. The Parliament did not pass any constitutional amendments. Nevertheless, many national constitutional design challenges were in focus because of the Constitutional Court’s activity in 2020.

Venezuela
2020 has been a year of frustrated efforts to bring about a democratic transition in Venezuela, and of further continuity of Nicolas Maduro’s authoritarian project during the pandemic. This has been a period marked by dueling presidencies with Maduro acting as de facto President, while more than 50 countries recognized Juan Guaidó as president of Venezuela.
